

A YOUNG WASHOUGAL father, circa 1885-95, coaxes his young one onto the higher planks that used to extend into the streets from the also-elevated boardwalks. Rain was just as common then as now, but dirt streets guaranteed little drainage.

WASHOUGAL residents were proud of their new IOOF building, seen here during the early years of the 1900s.